Prayer Focus on... Church Flowers

You may have noticed that recently there are rarely flowers in church, but I wonder whether you have missed them. Modern churches can seem rather bleak and minimalistic, with little to remind the congregation of the wonders of creation. Flowers in church serve as a reminder to us to be thankful for everything we have, and the seasonality of flowers can make us thankful for and appreciative of each phase of the year. I always feel that if we enjoy flowers in our own homes, surely God will enjoy flowers in His.

We use the flowers in church as a reminder to praise and thank God for the abundance which surrounds us, and for our ability to see, touch, and smell.

With a rota in place, our aim will be to place fresh flowers in church every two weeks, and I hope to hold a workshop in the autumn, so that anyone who fancies having a go can do so, and we can thus encourage more individuality in what we see in church.

Our country needs our prayers...

“Pray Your Part” is an invitation from our bishops to encourage prayer and participation in the life of our nation and communities. Each day explores a different aspect of our common life, with a short Bible reading, reflection and prayer.

Find out more and sign up for free digital versions of the reflections via email and audio at cofe.io/PrayYourPart
